INDUSTRIAL COATINGS

INDUSTRIAL COATINGS

Industrial paint is a specialized, high-performance liquid or coating designed to protect surfaces such as metal, concrete, and steel from harsh conditions like corrosion, chemicals, high heat, and wear. Unlike decorative paint, it offers superior durability, ensuring longevity for machinery, infrastructure, and heavy equipment.

Key Characteristics and Components

- Purpose: Primarily protective (corrosion resistance), but also decorative.
- Types: Epoxies (tough/corrosion resistance), Polyurethanes (UV/abrasion resistance)
- Application: Applied via industrial spray systems (airless), rollers, or brushes.
- Process: Often involves a multi-stage process: substrate cleaning, primer application and topcoat.

Usage Examples

- Infrastructure: Coating steel bridges, pipelines, and concrete structures to prevent rust and decay.
- Manufacturing: Protecting industrial machinery and factory flooring from chemical spills and abrasive wear.
- Marine & Automotive: Protecting ships, water reservoirs, and automotive parts from moisture and salt water.
- Specialty: Applying non-stick films (e.g., Xylan) or heat-resistant coatings to components.
- Components: A typical system includes a primer for adhesion, intermediate coats for thickness, and a topcoat for environmental resistance.
- Functionality: Beyond protection, they can offer functional benefits like anti-slip, non-stick, and fire resistance

PROJECTS

Every project begins as a blank canvas, but it's never just about colour. It's about mood, memory, and meaning. We listen to the walls, understand the space, and then give it a soul through texture, shade, and finish. When we leave, the work doesn't just look beautiful it feels alive.
